

ON LOCATION

with Jared Cowan

Visit the locations from your favorite films with the people who were there when it all happened.

On Location with Jared Cowan is an independently produced, interview-style podcast that takes our audience out of the recording studio directly to the filming locations that have made an impact on moviegoers worldwide. Each episode focuses on the filming locations from one particular movie as we sit down with our guest(s) at a location from that film. Throughout the show we break down the complex decisions that went into determining the filming locations for that movie. Our guests, who have included directors, production designers, location managers and cast members, also look back at shooting on location throughout their careers.

Our podcast is produced and hosted by filming locations explorer, Jared Cowan. Jared is a photographer and film journalist who has written extensively on the subject of filming locations for various Los Angeles publications. His first article on the subject of filming locations was about the San Fernando Valley roots of 1984's The Karate Kid. Jared also leads filming location tours of the San Fernando Valley, Pasadena, and the historic Langham Huntington Hotel in Pasadena.

Whether it was the Ghostbusters firehouse in New York City, or the steps of the Philadelphia Museum of Art from Rocky (where he proposed to his wife), Jared has been seeking out filming locations from a young age. On Location with Jared Cowan began as an expansion of Jared's writing on filming locations. Sometimes there just wasn't enough space in an article to convey all the intricacies that went into finding the places that moviegoers deem iconic. Sometimes an editor would pass on a story about the locations from a particular film. Our podcast developed out of a desire to find another platform to tell these filmmaking stories in their entirety.
